

Like many who have posted, I am also deeply troubled by the proposed changes that would allow more nudity/indecency/profanity/vulgarity. I would expect the media to continue to push the bounds, but believe that we have had enough. So much of what is sacred is already flaunted as nothing more than a casual hobby to satisfy selfish interests. We cannot expect that our children will not be affected because they are heavily influenced by what they see and hear. Let's not make it more difficult for parents to teach their children tried and true principles that will ensure a positive future.

I agree that standards should be tightened, not loosened. The negative effects of what is already available to our children to consume are well known and yet we continue to push the bounds under the pretense of free speech.

Please do not allow these proposed changes to take effect. What is appropriate now is helping the rising generation to make healthy choices, and not how much more money the broadcasting companies can make by selling more indecency.
